Dear Freelancers, I'm Maks, CEO of PrimeTimer — a technical recruitment platform with a focus on freelancers. We've become the world's leading platform for IT recruiters and hiring managers to connect with outstanding and qualified freelancers. We've now moved from a lean development team to a large scale organization with the vision and potential to scale across the industry. We've also made some pretty epic hires. With this in mind, we're looking to hire a Full Stack Developer. So... You've made the decision to freelance, you're bursting with ideas about how to improve the experience of being a freelance developer, and you're about to do the most important thing you'll ever do. You've hired a marketing agency to help promote your work. Well done. Your work is how you make money. If you're looking to make money, you probably need to start thinking about how you can solve problems for people, rather than merely discussing them. You're now going to start to see offers from recruiters for jobs. Which ones sound good? Which ones make sense for you? And, which ones don't? Well, let's be honest — you're going to want to take a job that pays well and makes you look like a professional. And, you're going to want to make sure you're not going to make too many mistakes because it's a new industry, and you don't want to risk your reputation. If you're going to accept a job, you're going to want it to be on a work-for-hire basis. In other words, you're going to want it to be a permanent position, so you can start to build a reputation and work on earning a full time salary. That's a bad thing. Recruiters are driven by their need to earn commission. Full-time designers spend most of their time thinking about design. Full-time developers spend most of their time thinking about the way they program. And, you'll only ever work 6d1f23a050
