More than 6,000 people have been laid off or told their jobs will be outsourced since September 2008, according to data from a national labor organization. That's an average of about 200 people a day, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. The Bureau released the data for May on Wednesday. More than 2,000 people were fired from the auto industry, and more than 2,500 people in the entertainment, insurance and retail industries were laid off. At the same time, nearly 6,000 people were hired. The data included hires at just under 200 establishments, according to the Bureau. "Overall it's a down year for hiring. We're treading water," says Robert Kayner, senior economist at IHS Global Insight. Meanwhile, the unemployed reached a new high, according to the U.S. Department of Labor. The government reports that nearly 17.5 million people were unemployed in May, up from 17.4 million in April. The unemployment rate increased to 10.2 percent in May from 10.1 percent in April.
