Somatomedin-C (Sm-C) stimulation of cultured rat anterior pituitary cells was examined by quantitating the immunoreactive GH present in the medium after the addition of increasing amounts of the protein. Sm-C induced a dose-related increase in the amount of immunoreactive GH secreted by incubated cells. Optimal Sm-C concentrations for GH release ranged from approximately 10-25 ng/ml and were obtained with Sm-C concentrations of 50-75 ng/ml or greater. Sm-C stimulated GH secretion at Sm-C concentrations of 5-20 ng/ml, corresponding to the concentration range shown to stimulate L cell growth. Sm-C was approximately 1000-fold less potent than synthetic growth hormone-releasing factor (GRF) in these experiments. The stimulatory effects of Sm-C and GRF were observed only for the initial 8 h of a 24-h incubation. Medium replacement by phenol red during the incubation period did not influence the GH stimulatory activity of Sm-C or GRF.

These data indicate that Sm-C, like GRF, is capable of stimulating the release of pituitary GH. The molecular relationship of Sm-C to the somatogenic trophic hormone found in the rat is discussed.1.

Field of the Invention This invention relates to improvements in the art of modifying the tonic frequency of a liquid crystal display and, more particularly, to such improvements in the form of means for increasing the tonic frequency of the liquid crystal display while permitting the liquid crystal display to be tuned to a desired frequency. 2. Description of the Prior Art Liquid crystal displays have been applied to visual telecommunication as well as certain visual display instruments. Such liquid crystal displays are capable of modulating the intensity of light passing therethrough in response to electrical signals. Typically, these displays are made by filling the empty spaces between two substrates with a liquid crystal material. The space between the substrates is then sealed and the liquid crystal molecules, which are ordinarily aligned in a particular orientation, are reoriented by the application of an electric field. The orientation of the liquid crystal

Here's what you could have done, instead: 1. Sketch and plan a storyboard. It will look good on paper, and you won't be nervous about the results. 2. Make 50 or so full color illustrations. If you mastered the pen and ink technique, great. If not, experiment with the watercolor, watercolor pencils, a variety of pens, or watercolors, until you come up with a good solution. 3. Finish the storyboard, and make a final illustration if need be. 4. Take that illustration home, and look at it with fresh eyes. Maybe revise it again. Maybe draw another. 5. Make another storyboard and another illustration. 6. Finish your illustration, and make a final illustration if need be. That is how you would do things. You could maybe save a few days of waiting, and decide to do all of this first. Or you could take one step at a time. That is up to you. Anyway, 6d1f23a050
